Candidate 1

7	The writer's overall purpose is to inform the reader of the issue of integration of immigrants in Germany, and the writer generally has a positive view of this issue.
	The writer mentions that the inflow of refugees is a positive thing for the labour market, so it would be good for the integration process to accelerate and prepare people for life in Germany.
	The author also states that for some integration isn't necessary, since some just want to return home as soon as possible.
	The writer also points out that the integration

	The ^{Immigration} integrative process has been good for Amir also, now he feels safe and at peace, and can even finish his education while he's here.
	The writer also explains that the course is very broad, covering many topics, and adapts to current society, suggesting that it is high quality and effective
	However the writer also points out that there is some animosity to refugees in Germany, with abuse and crime happening. Nevertheless, it is noted that these experiences aren't universal and not everyone possesses them.
	The writer concludes the passage showing that the immigrants can make friends and learn to be tolerant, rounding off the passage in a positive light.

Candidate 2

7. the purpose of this text is to inform about the integration process for immigrants and its effects which is why it starts off with some standard knowledge about it it does this with facts like the goals of the integration not just being about teaching immigrants German but also to teach about culture it goes on with differences in life for Aisha and Aamir and their view on the situation then going back to the actual integration it talks about recent developments in the course and how it keeps being revised to make it fit the current society and participants it then briefly describes the content of the course listing the themes and topics it contains after that it goes to what else happens in the course with it being the opportunity to talk about the experiences in the every day life the immigrants now lead it finishes with the overall effect the course has and what some of the benefits are

"... das Verständnis der deutschen..."	The word "verständnis" shows that immigrants are taught to understand the German culture and aren't taught forced to adhere to the German culture as some may leave Germany after a while.
	This shows that the integration course is merely there to inform immigrants of how life in Germany is like.

Candidate 4

7.	The writer's overall purpose of writing this text is to persuade the reader that immigration is important and integration is working in Germany and plays an important role.
	Firstly, the author speaks to two experts side about the course. This is to prove to the reader that the information they're reading is reliable. It should also convince the reader about the importance of integration as two different experts see its role. ^{as such} The writer also talks to two refugees who explain how coming to Germany has changed their life. This makes the text feel personal and Should go some way to convincing the writer of its importance as it is personal.

The writer also uses lots on a number of occasions, this is to help show how much of a difference it all makes + to convince the reader that it is important, "zum Beispiel die Kriterien von Bundesday... Rolle der Frau."

The article also generally has a positive tone with references to ~~the~~ advantages ("ein Vorteil für den deutschen Arbeitsmarkt") and the good work being done, throughout. So much so, that even when some opposing points are raised, the writer still focuses on "that's not what all Germans are like." This persuades the ~~author~~ ~~that~~ ~~all~~ ~~this~~ ~~is~~ ~~good~~ reader that the author is correct as everything seems good. ~~etc~~

At the beginning, the author references the constitution which makes clear that this is a serious and well researched piece which helps to persuade the reader of the importance as it has legal basis and is extremely factual.

All of this leads to the author's overall purpose being to persuade the reader that immigration and integration is good.
