	different sources such as POWs or piracy, these slaves could be from other countries or from Athens itself, much like the source saying they could also be from the UK meaning in both cases slavery can be foreign and domestic based.
	It says that slave masters are out to make a monetary gain from selling and buying slaves, this very similar to Athens as slaves would be sold at slave markets at varying prices depending on skills, gender or age but the slave master would see them more as property and try to get the best price possible.
	In this source it says that they believe they are escaping their problems by doing what they are doing, but this is far from the case as you are then becoming somebody's property and can be treated anyway they wish. This source is different to ^{Ancient} the Athens as they got very little choice in becoming a slave, yes maybe some did chose it as a way to be fed and sheltered but it's more likely that they didn't have a choice as they would of been captured by slave masters or pirates and sold

This source is very similar to ancient Athenian slavery as it talks about similar jobs, qualities and reasoning behind slavery^{now} which are almost identical to the same features and reasoning behind ancient Athenian slavery showing how this certain trade doesn't change at all

	Roman rule via a person called a Governor
	who would basically rule that province on
	behalf of Rome with roles such as delegation
	of justice and in charge of the ^{the} provinces troops.
	The lives of those affected ^{who lived} in these provinces
	would change as the provinces brought
	with them different aspects.
	A way in which the ^{lives} were affected by being a
	province could be the introduction of more
	roads, it doesn't sound like a lot but this
	helped with a provinces infrastructure as it allowed
	for easier trade and moving of resources and
	connected it to other Roman territories opening it
	to a new market to trade with.
	Another benefit would be the introduction of
	aqueducts and sewage systems. This would
	improve the general wellbeing and quality of
	life in a province as it meant waste would
	be removed lowering chance of disease
